

I urge you to retain the present rules. There is far too much consolidation and control by a few corporations now. Cast your vote on the side of the public.

Also I agree with some comments from a recent Washington Post article. "It seems to me that instead of serving the public interest, you are really serving the interests of a few corporate fiefdoms that want to control more of what we see and hear."
and

"The airwaves are open to the public and should not be controlled by a few very rich and powerful media moguls who are only interested in their own gain and/or political influence,"
